

ARENAL VOLCANO

LA FORTUNA

At 5,437 feet, the Arenal Volcano looms large and ominous over the pastured green hillsides that surround its base. The conically-shaped behemoth is at least 1,633 meters (5,358 ft) high and almost perfectly symmetrical - an awe-inspiring sight, despite its current lack of eruptions and lava flow. The Arenal Volcano National Park is not to be missed during a trip to Costa Rica. Within the four different life zones, visitors may find a stunning array of flora and fauna, including approximately 75% of the total 850 species of birds that have been identified in Costa Rica, sloths, white-faced capuchin monkeys, coati, deer and snakes. About a 3 hour drive from San Jose, the small town of La Fortuna is the base for most travelers in the Arenal area and is 6.4 km (4 miles) from the volcano. Those seeking relaxation and adventurers alike will find a multitude of activities around Arenal.

Horseback riding, hiking, canopy and bridge tours, zip lining, canoeing, kayaking, kite surfing, canyoning (water repelling), class II – IV whitewater rafting, and spelunking (cave exploration), and a hike at the base of the Arenal volcano on a lava flow from 1992 are all available for the thrill seekers. The infamous hot springs, known for their mineralized healing properties, will soothe tired muscles, world renowned spas provide luxurious treatments, and some of Costa Rica's finest dining will satiate the gourmand's appetite. One may also enjoy the sights and aromas of the Arenal Botanical Gardens, where there are some 2,500 species of tropical plants, as well as the butterflies and birds that flutter through their colorful displays.
